

Dr Susanna Thede is a resident senior lecturer in European Studies at Institute for European Studies. Her research expertise is primarily in the areas of trade, trade policy, foreign direct investment and offshoring/location of production, on topics broadly related to policy, institutions and international economic integration. She is teaching and supervising topics in her areas of specialization such as European Union Trade Policy, European Union Regional Policy and European Economic Integration at undergraduate and masters levels and currently coordinates the Institute's Masters Programme. She has previously worked at several well-renowned research institutions in Europe such as Lund University, Paris School of Economics and University College Dublin, often in externally funded projects. She is currently involved in collaborative projects with colleagues at Lund University, RWTH Aachen University and Örebro University. Recent publications are 'Bending the Rules, Breaking the Rules: How Corruption and Lobbying affects the Market Investment Selection of Swedish Firms' (joint with N.Å. Gustafson), published in the international peer-reviewed journal The World Economy, and 'The Firms Foreign Internalization Decision' in B.J. Christensen and C. Kowalczyk (eds.) Globalization: Strategies and Effects, published at Springer Verlag. She has been engaged as referee for the international peer-reviewed journals The Open Economies Review, The Review of Development Economics and The World Economy and is currently a member of the European Economic Association and the Forum for Research on Empirical International Trade.