The Hon. Didier Burkhalter Minister of Foreign Affairs of Switzerland visits MEDAC

In March 2016, the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies welcomed the Hon. Didier Burkhalter, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Switzerland. Dr. Joe Borg, Chairman of MEDAC, introduced Minister Burkhalter and highlighted the commitment of the Swiss Government to MEDAC and expressed profound appreciation in this respect. Minister Burkhalter delivered a keynote address on the theme 'Good Offices and Mediation' to the students pursuing the Masters degree in Diplomatic Studies at the University of Malta.

MEDAC Academic Staff participate in the Preparatory Meeting of the Anna Lindh Foundation Forum

In March 2016, MEDAC staff led by Director Prof. Stephen Calleya participated in the formal launch of preparations for the 3rd edition of the Euro-Mediterranean Forum for Intercultural Dialogue. The two day meeting in Valletta gathered representatives from regional institutions and civil society networks. The Forum will take place in Valletta on 24 and 25 October 2016 and will represent the largest single gathering of civil society working to promote intercultural dialogue across the Mediterranean region. The Maltese Ministry of Foreign Affairs is strongly supporting the initiative.

During the meeting in Valletta, there was a strong consensus on the need to leverage the Forum process to reaffirm the centrality of intercultural action in creating solutions in the face of transnational challenges impacting on societies in the region, including the impact of the refugee crisis, extremism and rising xenophobia, migration and youth unemployment. The Maltese government and participating regional institutions also underlined their commitment to ensuring the Forum process can have a central contribution to influencing the European Neighbourhood Policy Review. Key drivers of the intercultural dialogue agenda were identified for the Forum as a result of the 2-day meeting, with a strategic focus on: cross-cultural reporting; intercultural education; artistic mobility; social entrepreneurship and new models of civil society development; and the future intercultural cities.

MEDAC was established in 1990 as a joint venture between the governments of Switzerland and Malta in an effort to promote Mediterranean peace and security. Since then, both Switzerland and Malta have seen MEDAC develop as a centre of excellence for the training of young diplomats from the Mediterranean region and beyond.

In his keynote address, Minister Burkhalter highlighted the numerous attributes that constitute the key elements in the provision of good offices and mediation in international relations. The students of MEDAC were able to interact with the Hon. Minister Burkhalter in the dynamic question and answer session that was moderated by Prof. Stephen Calleya, Director of MEDAC.

Visit to MEDAC by the Chairman of the EU Military Committee

On 5 May 2016 General Mikhail Kostarakos, Chairman of the European Union Military Committee, visited the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies and delivered an address to the Masters students on the theme of 'The Military View of the European Union's Global Strategy'.

General Kostarakos provided a comprehensive analysis of the main security challenges facing the European Union and highlighted the necessity for the European Union to adapt to the changing geo-political landscape if it wanted to be a relevant security actor in contemporary international relations.

Throughout his address General Kostarakos focused on the importance of the EU as a source of stability and security in its immediate vicinity and beyond so that countries around the world, including across the southern shore of the Mediterranean, can improve their political and economic societal outlook.

The students of MEDAC benefited immensely from this timely opportunity and were able to interact with General Kostarakos during the follow up question and answer session, which focused on the EU's new Global Strategy. MEDAC is grateful to the Armed Forces of Malta who made this visit to MEDAC possible.

MEDAC Human Rights Summer School 2016

Initiated by the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies (MEDAC) in 2000, the 2016 MEDAC Human Rights Summer School attracted participants from a broad range of sectors and countries in North Africa, Europe and the Middle East. Diplomats, non-governmental organization personnel, students, youth workers and teachers came together to explore, discuss and debate current issues and topics within human rights. The 2016 summer school focused on the theme of Human Rights and the Mediterranean. Some of the issues and perspectives which the participants and lecturers engaged with were:

- Exploring the history of human rights and human rights values
- Understanding human rights instruments and frameworks and the historical, social and cultural contexts in which they have emerged with a specific focus on Mediterranean perspectives
- Discussing current debates and challenges in human rights and identifying the core issues involved
- Participating in individual and group-work learning

The summer school continued in its tradition of utilising a mix of both formal and informal training methods with lectures, discussions, art and drama all featuring in the summer school agenda. The participants in the 2016 summer school also reflected the usual diversity with participants coming from Albania, Armenia, Georgia, Germany, Egypt, Ireland, Jordan, Lebanon, Malta, Morocco and Palestine. In their final evaluation the participants expressed their appreciation for the diversity of the group and learning methods with one participant stating: "this was one of the best groups I ever worked with and the diversity in learning methods was a huge plus."

EASO visit

In February 2016, MEDAC staff and students visited the European Asylum Support Office. They were welcomed by its Executive Director, Mr. Jose Carreira. Two presentations by EASO staff members addressed the students on the latest asylum trends and operational developments, particularly the establishment of so called hot spots in Italy and Greece. A question and answer session allowed students to further explore a number of issues of interest.

Visit to MEDAC by the Hon. Minister of Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Hon. Igor Crnadak visited the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies on the 27 July 2016. He was accompanied by Minister Counsellor Igor Basic, Ambassador Zeljana Zovko and Malta's Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina Ambassador Saviour Borg.

During the visit Minister Crnadak briefed Professor Stephen Calleya, Director of MEDAC, Dr. Derek Lutterbeck, Holder of the Swiss Chair, and Dr. Omar Grech, Co-ordinator of the Human Dimension Programme and Lecturer in International Law, about Bosnia and Herzegovina's foreign policy agenda and regional relations across the Balkans. An elaborate overview of Bosnia's relations with the European Union was presented including most recent developments in Bosnia's efforts to become a member of the EU.

The occasion was also an opportunity to brief Minister Crnadak and the distinguished delegation from Bosnia about MEDAC's forthcoming academic activities and provide an update about MEDAC's dynamic alumni network which includes former students from Bosnia.

Yet, another anniversary which Malta celebrated in 2014 was the 50th Anniversary of Malta's membership of the United Nations Organisation. The United Nations has served Malta well during the past five decades. In turn, Malta has served well the United Nations and its system. It is now up to us and those that come after us to ensure that Malta will continue to make its membership of the United Nations effective and pro-active. This can be achieved by strengthening Malta's presence, leadership and contribution in support of the work, activities and programmes of the United Nations.

This publication serves as a tribute to and a legacy of the dedication and commitment of all those who have contributed to Malta's foreign policy in the first 50 years of its membership of the United Nations.

'A Strategic Perspective for a New Era in Euro-Mediterranean Relations: Religion, Immigration and a Post-Arab Spring World' in Adler Jr., G.J. (ed), Secularism, Catholicism, and the Future of Public Life. New York: Oxford University Press, 2015.

Prof. Calleya presents a portrait of the intricate international relations occurring through the space of the Mediterranean. Malta is on the geographic boundary of two continents, situated between various religious traditions, states and economic forces. From this vantage point, Prof. Calleya demonstrates that the forces that drive many of Europe's cultural "crises", such as immigration and Islamic diversity, are inadequately addressed by European states. Islamic immigrants are poorly engaged by receiving countries. This situation, along with cultural exclusion, creates new problems.

Noting the lack of coherent engagement by European countries with the deep issues of the uprisings, Prof. Calleya writes that it is "astonishing to see the EU adopt a navel gazing attitude towards the historic moment taking place in the Mediterranean."

The authors ask whether migration can justifiably be considered a security issue, and under which circumstances this may be the case. They focus on two different approaches to migration: a state-centric approach related to the notion of national security and a human security approach and human rights considerations. It concludes with a brief evaluation of the EU's response to the migration crisis in the Mediterranean.

'Developing States Diplomacy' in Constantinou, C. M.; Kerr, P. & Sharp, P. (eds), The SAGE Handbook of Diplomacy. London: SAGE Publications, 2016.

This chapter examines the challenges small developing states are facing and identifies trends in their foreign policy decision-making track record. The fact that small developing countries have limited human and natural resources gives rise to numerous questions addressed in this analysis: what are the strategic mechanisms that small developing states employ? ; what are the primary motivations that guide developing states diplomacy?; how do small developing states pursue their strategic objectives?; how do small developing states prioritise their foreign policy objectives to remain relevant in the international society of states?

This chapter also includes a review of the evolution of Malta's foreign policy, as an example of a developing state's diplomatic practice. The study concludes by exploring future options available to developing states to help them maintain a relevant stance in an ever changing international system, including focusing on multilateral diplomacy.

MEDAC study visit to Switzerland

From 29 March to 3 April 2016, MEDAC organised its annual study visit to Geneva and Berne in Switzerland. In Geneva, MEDAC students visited several international organisations, such as the UN Headquarters, the World Trade Organisation (WTO), the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

Briefings at the UN and the UNHCR focused mainly on the current humanitarian challenges related to the Syrian crisis, while the presentation at the WTO addressed the current status of the global trading system and relevant negotiations. A briefing at the Geneva Centre for Security Policy (GCSP) also formed part of the study visit, where MEDAC students were addressed by Prof. Mahmoud Mohamedou on current political and security trends on the MENA region. At the end of their stay in Geneva, MEDAC students and staff were welcomed by the Permanent Representative of Malta to the UN, Ambassador Olaph Terribile, who gave an overview of the work of the Maltese Mission in Geneva.

The third day of the study trip took the students to Berne, where they were hosted by the Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation (SDC). This included briefings and discussions between MEDAC students and representatives from different departments of the Swiss Federal Administration on various topics related to the MENA region. The study visit to Switzerland was rounded off by guided tours in the old towns of both Berne and Geneva.

MEDAC study visit to Germany

From 10 to the 15 April, MEDAC's Master of Diplomacy students participated in a study visit to the Federal Republic of Germany. The group first travelled to Berlin, where meetings took place at the German Federal Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The group was welcomed to the Ministry by Mr Patrick Heinz, Head of Training for International Diplomats. Over two days, sessions took place with representatives of key departments of the Foreign Ministry. MEDAC students also had exchanges at the Federal Chancellery and the Parliament as well as at the Swiss Embassy, and the Maltese Embassy with Ambassador Albert Friggieri.

In Bonn, the group participated in a joint seminar with Master students of the Center for European Integration Studies (ZEI), Bonn University at the invitation of its Director, Prof. Ludger Kuehnhardt. As part of the ongoing cooperation between ZEI and MEDAC, the seminar focused on the exchange of ideas and experiences between students from both sides of the Mediterranean and beyond. MEDAC and ZEI students held short presentations followed by a discussion on the current situation in the Euro-Mediterranean region touching upon different subjects such as root causes of migration, border protection, and Euro-Mediterranean diplomatic relations.

The MEDAC group also visited Deutsche Welle, Germany's international broadcaster, where they had the opportunity to meet with the Head of Online and Multimedia Arabic Services and a representative of the International Relations Department. The students were also briefed by a representative of the United Nations University on the UN Campus in Bonn, focusing on its engagement in human security and disaster preparedness. The group also visited the House of German History.

Finally, MEDAC students visited in Frankfurt the KfW, the German government-owned development bank, and the European Central Bank, where they participated in a working session with Dr. Michael Sturm, Deputy Head of Division International Relations and Cooperation.

In October 2010, I was honored to be a student of the first cohort for the dual-degree, collaborative program between George Mason University's School for Conflict Analysis and Resolution (S-CAR) and the University of Malta's Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies (MEDAC). The program has been the foundation of my professional development. As a leader in labor relations for a United States government security contractor, I often draw insight from MEDAC's faculty in getting to "yes" by negotiating principles rather than positions. MEDAC and S-CAR's focus on practice as much theory provided me the tools I needed when power was unbalanced at the table. When meetings were in zero-sum stalemate, MEDAC's emphasis on principles rather than positions opened dialogue at the table and guided my thinking to yes for my members. Having studied under outstanding faculty from two world-class institutions and working with brilliant peers from vastly diverse experiences, I would recommend MEDAC/S-CAR to any professional who depends on conflict resolution or diplomacy in his or her career. Whether one's career advances in government, private sector, academia, or NGOs, I could not more strongly recommend study in Malta as a foundation in Mediterranean security or conflict resolution.

2010 - 2011*

I travelled to Malta from Tunisia late September 2010, to join the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies (MEDAC), and upon starting our studies, I realized that this time-honoured Institution has something distinguishing it from other Academic Institutions that I know. The courses rhythm and training was fast but easy to follow and included several important disciplines, supervised by well-known University Professors, Diplomats and Senior lecturers from Malta and beyond.

The end of 2010 was tough for me personally, and for my country Tunisia. On a personal level, I suffered health difficulties, and as for my country it experienced a situation of unrest that triggered upheavals in the region. "Not the time for giving up",

I told myself, and it was worth the sacrifice.

Five years later, and I find myself the Political Counsellor at one of our Embassies in Asia. What I have learnt at MEDAC has benefitted me immensely and I fall back on it often and with pleasure. The improvement in my language skills has also served me well. The year at MEDAC passed all too quickly but its impact on my career and profile is enduring. I recommend MEDAC to all those who have diplomacy at heart.

Germany extends support to MEDAC

Students at the Mediterranean Academy of Diplomatic Studies are to continue benefiting from the academic expertise of a German Chair, after the existing agreement was extended.

The agreement with the German Government will allow MEDAC to benefit from the continuation of the German Chair for Peace Studies and Conflict Prevention up to autumn 2019. The Chair was launched in 2009. The first holder of the Chair is Dr. Monika Wohlfeld, an internationally recognised expert in conflict and security studies. Dr. Wohlfeld, who will continue her duties at MEDAC, was previously Deputy Director of the Conflict Prevention Centre of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) responsible for its field operation in 19 countries.

MEDAC Director Prof. Stephen Calleya and Germany's Ambassador to Malta H.E. Gudrun Sräga signed the agreement in the presence of Foreign Minister the Hon. Dr. George Vella. The Foreign Minister thanked the Government of Germany for its support, saying it confirmed Germany's active engagement towards the Mediterranean. Dr. Vella noted that as the challenges in the region continue to expand, this area of expertise has acquired key relevance for young diplomats. Amb. Sräga emphasised that Germany's renewed commitment is also honouring the excellent work and the outstanding academic services provided by MEDAC since 1990. Prof. Calleya thanked both governments for their continuous support towards the Academy.

The signing was also attended by MEDAC Board Chairman, Dr. Joe Borg, and Board member Amb. Alfred Zarb.
