INTRODUCTION

1.0 Background

This latest revised and enlarged edition of the Melitensia classification scheme for works on Malta and the Maltese includes not only the addition of new classmarks that have been added to the schedule in the intervening two years since the 4th rev. ed. was uploaded on the University of Malta's (UM) Institutional Repository OAR@UM but, it also includes for the classifier's convenience, the 'Arabic and Maltese Language and Literature Schedule'.

This document therefore includes the two inhouse classification schemes, (affectionately referred to as the "MZs" and the "PJs"), in operation for Melitensia works housed in the Melitensia Special Collections Department. Because these schedules are quintessentially products of the UM Library and are among the oldest inhouse classification schedules for Melitensia works that I know of, I have in the following pages also taken the liberty to add a small note on their history, which I hope may be of interest to the reader.

This edition also differs from its predecessor in that it includes for the first time a written policy that spells out the steps which need to be followed when updating the schedules. This serves not only to formalise the procedure but also ensures its dissemination to other classifiers within the UM Library who may also be affected by these additions.

1.1 The Melitensia Classification Schemes placed in context of other schemes in use at UM Library

While the Library of Congress Classification (LCC) scheme is today the preferred classification system adopted by UM Library, (so much so that in recent years a retro-conversion exercise on the Open Floors, now complete, was undertaken to convert books classified for historic reasons using the Dewey Decimal Classification (DDC) and the Bibliographic Classification known as "Bliss" to LC), there nevertheless remain some notable exceptions.

These 'other' classification schemes continue to have a place in our Library either because they fulfill a real need for a classification scheme on a micro-subject as in the case of the works housed in the Melitensia Department, or as in the unique case of works housed in the Reference Department, the urgency to retro-convert from Bliss to LCC has not been felt, possibly due to the compact nature of the collection.

Other than the two Melitensia classification schemes described here, the other classification schemes, (but in these other cases not inhouse ones), currently in use to describe micro-subjects are the Alternative Classification for Catholic Books, (affectionately referred to by the author's surname "Lynn") for works relating to religion and the Moys Classification & Thesaurus for Legal Material for works relating to law.

1.2 The Melitensia classification schemes: a historical perspective

The Bibliographic Classification Scheme still used to classify works housed in the Reference Department, referred to above, is thought to have been introduced by Malta's first professional librarian Ġużè Cassar Pullicino (1921-2005) during his tenure of office at UM Library back in the fifties, at a time when Bliss would have been considered quite modern.

Cassar Pullicino is also thought to have been responsible for constructing the inhouse classification scheme for material housed in the Melitensia Special Collections Department, (whose schedule is described here), based on the enlarged version of the Bliss class "M", 'History of Europe'.

In 1969 the then University Librarian Dr Paul Xuereb in response to the burgeoning local book trade in books published on the Maltese language and literature, two subjects that had been excluded from the original scope of the collection, introduced a further inhouse classification scheme based this time on the LC "PJ" classification to cover these subjects.

1.3 Policy regulating revisions & updates of the Melitensia classification schemes

In response to the emergence of new subjects, successive Melitensia classifiers have over the years felt the need to revise the scheme in order to ensure its continued relevance. The guidelines on how to set about this are outlined below:

1. Cataloguer in charge of cataloguing Melitensia material destined for the Melitensia Special Collections (SC) Department alerts the SC Manager and the Head of the Cataloguing Department of the need to revise the scheme and puts forward his/her suggestion(s).
2. SC Manager opens up a dialogue with the main stakeholders, (other information professionals can be included but it is important that the following are always present most particularly for changes to schedules MZ1 to MZZ) namely:
 - i) SC Manager
 - ii) Melitensia Cataloguer,
 - iii) Head of Melitensia Department, and
 - iv) Head of Cataloguing Department
3. Should any changes be made to the "PJ" schedules that is those referring to Arabic language, Maltese language and Maltese literature then it is important to also involve the Junior College Library cataloguers, (most particularly the Head of Department), into the discussion as these changes may also impact on their work.
4. When agreement is reached on the necessary revisions and/or updates, the Melitensia cataloguer is asked to revise the schedules and to then circulate the amended schedules to the stakeholders for correction.

5. When satisfied that all is correct the SC Manager is tasked with:
- i) communicating these changes to all the stakeholders and
 - ii) sending the revised schedules to the Head of the Open Science Department for uploading on the Library's IR (OAR) in open access for maximum visibility and dissemination.
