

About Our Contributors

Barry Mauer is associate professor of English at the University of Central Florida, and director of the Texts and Technology doctoral program. His recent research is about citizen curating, which aims to bring ordinary people into the production of exhibits, both online and in public spaces, using archival materials available in museums, libraries, public history centres, and other institutions. Mauer publishes comics about delusion and denial, particularly as they affect politics. Mauer is also an accomplished songwriter and recording artist. He lives in Orlando with his wife and daughter, two dogs, and his cat.

Benjamin Mifsud Joslin is a recent graduate from the University of Malta, with an M.A. Degree in English, Culture and the Media. He is primarily interested in contemporary rhetoric in all of its forms, and hopes to dedicate more time to researching its development.

Usdin L. Martínez is a first-year graduate student in the Political Science PhD program at Northwestern University, where he is also a Mellon Cluster Fellow in Critical Theory. His research agenda is mainly focused on the concept of radical democracy in contemporary political theory and philosophy. He also holds a Maîtrise degree in political philosophy from Paris-Diderot University (France) and a B.A. in Political Science and Economics from Los Andes University (Colombia).

Subro Saha is presently working as an International PhD Fellow with the Department of Comparative Literature (ICON), Utrecht University, Netherlands. He is also associated, as an Assistant Professor, with the Department of English at Amity University, Kolkata. In the last few years, he has delivered his research papers and plenary lectures at institutes like Zurich University, Utrecht University, the University of Malta, TISS Mumbai, and Jadavpur University among others. He holds publications with Edinburgh University Press, Routledge, and Springer among others. Some of his areas of interest include continental philosophy, materiality and body, philosophy of science, caste studies, and post/colonial studies.
