

About Our Contributors

Yan Yang is a fourth-year PhD student of English Literature at Peking University, and was a visiting student at UC Berkeley during academic year 2018/19. She was also an exchange student with the Anthropology Department at LSE during Lent Term, 2018. She received her Bachelor's and Master's degrees in English Literature from Peking University. Her research interest is mythography and mythopoesis in Victorian Britain. Her PhD thesis in progress is entitled 'Max Müller's Theory of Myth and its Reception Among Victorian Writers'.

Richmond B. Adams currently teaches American literature and culture at Northwestern Oklahoma State University, where he has been since 2014. He holds a PhD from Southern Illinois University Carbondale (2011) and has published on a variety of concerns pertaining to American life since 1865. His greatest joy is being married to his award-winning spouse, Dr M. Jane Johansson, who teaches courses related to the American Civil War at Rogers State University, which is also in Oklahoma.

Dallel Sarnou is an associate professor with the English department at Mostaganem university, a poetess, and a young academic researcher interested in postcolonial studies, educational technology, posthumanism, cultural studies, transnational literatures, border studies, Orientalism, feminism, and Arab woman writings. She has already published a number of academic papers on contemporary Arab women writers, a paper on youth vs Arab revolutions, and has published a series of poems in many international anthologies. Now, she is working on virtual subjectivities, netnographic research, and transhumanism.

Rogers Asempasah holds a PhD degree from the University of Sapienza, Rome, and is currently a lecturer at the Department of English, University of Cape Coast, Ghana. Drawing on Giles Deleuze, his PhD dissertation focused on the clamour of being and the utopian impulse in selected works of Ben Okri and J.M. Coetzee. His research focuses on African literature and popular culture.