Tertiary level students are tomorrow's public officers

The Public Service is the driving force behind Government. During the past few years, a programme of renewal has aimed at making the Public Service more efficient and capable of meeting the aspirations of both users and deliverers of services. Several initiatives have been taken in this regard, resulting in a drastic reduction of bureaucracy and the delivery of a service of excellence.

At the same time, the Public Services constantly strives to be a model employer, offering a vast array of careers and training opportunities as well as excellent working conditions and support for all employees. Importance is given to career paths, so that Public Service employees have the opportunity to progress in their respective careers and remain motivated.

Training opportunities have also been strengthened greatly, through the setting up, a year ago, of the Institute for the Public Services. This provides courses at all levels from clerical staff to top management.

The Public Service strongly believes that satisfied and fulfilled employees are able to deliver a high standard of service to citizens. That is why, apart from a wide range of career possibilities, it also offers flexibility when it comes to family-friendly measures. Within the Public Service, a better work-life balance becomes possible and employees may progress in their careers regardless of having children, dealing with illness and other situations.

Being part of the Public Service and engaging with the general public, through the provision of government services, provides job satisfaction and self-fulfilment.

A career in the Public Service can be very rewarding, with the possibility to progress, grow and participate in the rendering of services of excellence.

Tertiary level students are tomorrow's public officers. They have the opportunity of being at the forefront of delivering and implementing changes to bring about a better Public Service. By becoming public officers, they will embark on a career which puts them in constant contact with the general public and gives them the opportunity to deliver the best service possible.

There are several career streams within the Public Service which provide a path leading to job satisfaction and self-fulfilment. To list just a few, one may take up a career in accountancy, environment, administration, architecture, dentistry, education, economics, pharmacy, engineering, communications, commerce, law, psychology, health, social sciences, social work, diplomatic studies, European affairs, ICT and sciences.

A myriad of opportunities await you within the Public Service. It is simply a matter of deciding on which career path you wish to travel along its echelons.
