

---

THE AUTHORS

---

LINO BRIGUGLIO is Professor and Head of the Economics Department, Director of the Islands and Small States Institute and Director of the Gozo Centre, all at the University of Malta. He was awarded a PhD in Economics from the University of Exeter (UK) in 1982. Professor Briguglio has published a large number of papers on islands and small states, one of which is a seminal article on the economic vulnerabilities of small island states in World Development (September 1995). He has also edited a series of three books on vulnerability, resilience and competitiveness of Small States, published by the University of Malta in collaboration with the Commonwealth Secretariat. Professor Briguglio has acted as consultant to several international organisations on matters related to the economies of small states. He has represented the Maltese government in many international conferences dealing with islands and small states. He is a member of the Malta Fair Trading Commission (a judiciary tribunal) and the Malta Commission for Sustainable Development, and serves on a number of Government Committees and University of Malta Boards.

DAVID CARMENT is a full Professor of International Affairs at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University and Fellow of the Canadian Defence and Foreign Affairs Institute (CDFAI). He is also a NATO Fellow and listed in Who's Who in International Affairs. In addition Professor Carment serves as the principal investigator for the Country Indicators for Foreign Policy project (CIFF). Professor Carment has served as Director of the Centre for Security and Defence Studies at Carleton University and is the recipient of a Carleton Graduate Student's teaching excellence award, SSHRC fellowships and research awards, Carleton University's research achievement award, and a Petro-Canada Young Innovator Award. Professor Carment has held fellowships at the Kennedy School, Harvard and the Hoover Institution, Stanford and currently heads a team of researchers that evaluates policy effectiveness in failed and fragile states. Recent publications on these topics appear in the Harvard International Review and the Journal of Conflict Management and Peace Science.

SATISH CHAND is an Associate Professor in the International and Development Economics Programme at the Australian National University (ANU). He is also the Director of the Pacific Policy Project, located within the Crawford School of Economics and Government that undertakes policy-relevant research on Papua New Guinea and the Pacific Islands. Professor Chand possesses a PhD in Economics from the ANU and has published work on international trade, economic growth, labour markets, and development. He has also worked as a consultant for the Asian Development Bank, the International Monetary Fund, The World Bank, and the Governments of Australia, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, the Republic of Marshall Islands, and Vanuatu.

JOHN CONNELL is Professor of Human Geography at the University of Sydney. He gained his two degrees at the University College London. His principal research interests centre on various facets of migration and small island states, but currently also include tourism (notably medical tourism) and festivals. His most recent publications are The International Migration of Health Workers (Routledge, New York, 2008) and Tourism at the Grass Roots: Villagers and Visitors in the Asia-Pacific Region (Routledge, London 2008).

GORDON CORDINA is a lecturer at the University of Malta. His main areas of research interest relate to sustainable growth and macroeconomic dynamics, on which he published several works. Dr Cordina's PhD thesis focused on the relationship between economic vulnerability and growth. Dr Cordina has served as Director General of the National Statistics Office of Malta, as Economic Advisor to the Malta Council for Economic and Social Development and as Head of the Research Department of the Central Bank of Malta. He has been involved in a number of research projects with institutions including the EU Commission, Government Ministries and private sector institutions.

JEAN PAUL FABRI is an economist specialising in Public Finance in the Economic Analysis Office at the Central Bank of Malta. He obtained his B.Com. (first class Hons) in Economics from the University of Malta in 2005 and Masters in Economics from the same University in 2007. His main research interests are political economy, small island states and economic growth. The dissertation he submitted in completion of the B.Com (Hons) Economics degree examined the existence of a political business cycle in Malta on which he based the article entitled "The Electoral Business Cycle in Malta" published in Bank of Valletta Autumn Review, No. 32 (2005). His dissertation submitted for his Master of Arts in Economics degree assessed the link between governance and economic development with a particular focus on small island states.

NADIA FARRUGIA lectures Microeconomics at introductory, intermediate and advanced levels, at the University of Malta. Her main research areas are small states studies, in particular economic vulnerability and resilience, economic growth and competitiveness. She was previously employed as an Economics Officer at the Central Bank of Malta, within the Economic Analysis Office. She graduated B.Com (first class Honours) in Economics from the University of Malta in 2002 and obtained a Master of Arts in Economics (with Distinction) from the same University in 2004. She is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Malta and is researching the relationship between economic resilience and economic performance. Her most recent publications focus on composite index construction and on small states.

JEAN-FRANÇOIS GAGNÉ is a PhD candidate at the University of Montreal and a recipient of a doctoral scholarship by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC). His research interests are related to political transformation and hybrid political regimes.

T. K. JAYARAMAN is Associate Professor in the Economics Department at the University of the South Pacific. He earned his Masters degree as an East West Center Grantee and his PhD degree as a Fulbright Scholar, both from the University of Hawaii. Dr Jayaraman was a Senior Economist with the Manila-based Asian Development Bank for more than 15 years. Before joining the University of the South Pacific, he was a postdoctoral research fellow at the Macmillan Brown Centre for Pacific Studies, University of Canterbury, New Zealand. His research interests are in the area of monetary economics and comparative economic development in the Pacific Island Countries. His publications include Monetary Issues in the South Pacific Island Countries, USP Book Centre, Suva, 2003 and Financial Sector Development and Private Investment in Vanuatu, Macmillan Brown Centre for Pacific Studies, Christchurch, New Zealand, 2003.

BARBARA LEE is a lawyer by profession and has been the Executive Director of Jamaica's Fair Trading Commission since 2001. Her public sector experience includes positions as legal Counsel in the Revenue and Financial Services Sectors. She is the author the study entitled "The Status of Competition Law Enforcement in Jamaica" included in the 2007 Competition and Antitrust Review, published by Euromoney Yearbooks. She has had various speaking engagements on various aspects of antitrust law and has addressed meetings organised by CARICOM, the International Competition Network (ICN), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

MARK MCGILLIVRAY is Chief Economist of the Australian Agency for International Development (AusAID) in Canberra, Australia. Prior to joining AusAID he was Deputy Director of the United Nations World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER). Professor McGillivray is also an Inaugural Fellow of the Human Development and Capability Association, an External Fellow of the Centre for Research in Economic Development and International Trade at the University of Nottingham and an Honorary Professor of Development Economics at the University of Glasgow. His qualifications include a PhD in Economics from La Trobe University in Melbourne, Australia. Dr McGillivray's main research interests are the allocation and effectiveness of foreign aid, measuring achieved human well-being and international inequality in well-being.

STEPHANIE MEDINA CAS is a senior economist in the Africa Department at the International Monetary Fund (IMF). She joined the IMF in 2000 and has worked in its International Capital Markets Department. Her research interest in the area of macro economic policy in small states has been prompted by her responsibilities as economist for Lesotho, Papua New Guinea, and Seychelles. Prior to the IMF, she worked for six years in the private sector at Fitch Ratings and Standard and Poor's on sovereign credit ratings and financial market analysis. She holds a Masters degree in International Economics, Banking, and Finance from the University of Wales, Cardiff Business School.

FARHAD NOORBAKSH is Professor of Development Economics and Head of Department of Economics at the University of Glasgow, United Kingdom. He is a Fellow of the Human Development and Capability Association. His research interests include welfare and human development, economic planning, macroeconomic adjustments, foreign direct investment and regional disparities.

RUI OTA is an assistant Professor of Economics at Chiba Keizai University, Japan. He received his bachelor's degree in business and commerce from Keio University, Japan, in 1999 and his PhD in economics from Johns Hopkins University, USA, in 2008. His research fields are industrial organisation and international trade, and one of his papers is published in Journal of International Trade and Economic Development. Professor Ota received several honors including Departmental Fellowship from the Department of Economics at Johns Hopkins University and Japan-IMF Scholarship for Advanced Studies. As a part of the scholarship, he worked as an intern at African Department at International Monetary Fund in 2006.

ALEXANDRA PIZZUTO is currently a Commission Officer at the National Commission for Higher Education (NCHE). Earlier she was employed as a research officer within the Economics Unit at the Malta Council for Economic and Social Development (MCSED) between June 2004 and July 2007. Ms. Pizzuto is also part-time lecturer in Macroeconomics and International Economics at the University of Malta. She possesses a Masters degree in Economics from the University of Malta. Her main research interests are small states, with special reference to economic growth and development. She has published work on the EU Stability and Growth Pact and on the European Monetary Union.

NAREN PRASAD is Research Coordinator at the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) where he coordinates several research projects on two broad areas, namely social policy and development, and market, business and regulation. His research interest is on development issues of small island states and on development issues in general. He has published several works on small states and on development issues such as privatisation. He holds a PhD in Economics from the University of Paris and has worked with various United Nations agencies including UNESCO and ILO.

STEWART PREST is the Project Coordinator for the Country Indicators for Foreign Policy Project, located at Carleton University in Ottawa. He has a Master's degree from the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs at Carleton University, and his research focuses on the causes and prevention of internal conflict and state fragility. His publications include "Risk Assessment and State Failure" (with D. Carment and J. Gazo) in Global Society; and "State Fragility and Implications for Aid Allocation: an Empirical Analysis" (with D. Carment and Y. Samy) to be published in a forthcoming edition of Conflict Management and Peace Science.

CLAUDIUS PREVILLE is an economist and expert in trade negotiations, policy research and multilateral diplomacy. He presently serves as international trade expert to the Government of the Seychelles in order to strengthen the human and institutional capacities of the Seychelles for accession to the WTO and completion of negotiations for an Economic Partnership Agreement with the European Union. Prior to this, he was employed with the Caribbean Regional Negotiating Machinery (RNM) as trade policy advisor where he developed trade policy positions for CARICOM in various negotiating theatres. Dr. Preville holds a PhD from the Institute of Social Studies in The Hague (Netherlands). He has published several works in the field of trade policy.

The Authors

MAHENDRA REDDY is currently the Acting Head of School of Economics and Associate Professor of Economics at the University of the South Pacific, Suva, Fiji. Previously, Dr Reddy was the Associate Dean, Research and Graduate Affairs of the Faculty of Business and Economics of the University of the South Pacific. He has a Masters and PhD degree in Agricultural and Resource Economics from the University of Hawaii. His research interests are in areas of Public Finance, Agricultural Economics and Applied Household/Firm Resource Allocation. He has published several works in these areas in refereed regional and international journals.

YIAGADEESEN SAMY is Assistant Professor of International Affairs at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University, Ottawa. He obtained his PhD in Economics from the University of Ottawa and his fields of specialisation are international trade and economic development. His current research interests include trade and labour standards, foreign direct investment, aid and debt relief, and the determinants of state fragility. His work (authored and co-authored) has been published in several journals including Applied Economics, the Journal of International Trade and Economic Development, Perspectiva Magazine, and Canadian Foreign Policy and Foreign Policy Analysis.

LAWRENCE SCHEMBRI is Chief in the International Department of the Bank of Canada, a position he has held since June 2005. His previous position was as Research Director in the department from July 2001 to May 2005. Mr. Schembri received a B.Com. Degree from the University of Toronto in 1979, an MSc degree in Economics from the London School of Economics in 1980, and a PhD in Economics from the MIT in 1984. After completing his PhD, Mr. Schembri was an Associate Professor of Economics at Carleton University until 2001. He currently holds the position of Adjunct Professor of Economics at Carleton. His own research has focused on issues relating to exchange rate regimes, exchange rate determination, and the effect of exchange rate movements on the economy and the implications for monetary policy. He has published articles in various journals and books, including the Journal of International Economics, the Canadian Journal of Economics, National Bureau of Economic Research Conference Volumes, and the Bank of Canada Review.

PAUL SUTTON is Research Professor in Caribbean Studies at London Metropolitan University. He holds a PhD from Manchester University and an M.Litt from Glasgow University. His major research interests focus on the development problems of small states, the political economy of the Caribbean and the policies of the European Union in the developing world. He is the author of many books and articles. Two of his recent articles are entitled "Charting Caribbean Development" (2001) and "Modernizing the State: Public Sector Reform in the Commonwealth Caribbean" (2006). He has acted as a consultant for various international organisations in the Caribbean and elsewhere and was the lead consultant for the Commonwealth Secretariat study A Future for Small States: Overcoming Vulnerability (1997).

STEPHANIE VELLA is a freelance economist and part-time lecturer at the University of Malta, in Intermediate Macroeconomics and Advanced Microeconomics. She had previously worked in the Economics Research Division of the Central Bank of Malta for three years up to 2004. Her main research interests include small states studies, international trade and environmental economics. She co-authored the paper "Conceptualising and Measuring Economic Resilience" with Lino Briguglio, Gordon Cordina and Nadia Farrugia. She also authored papers relating to small states including "Exchange Rate Strategies for Small Island Developing States," published in Bank of Valletta Review, No. 32, (2005).

CONSTANCE VIGILANCE works at the Commonwealth Secretariat as the Economic Adviser responsible for Small States. She holds a Masters in International Affairs in Economic Policy Management from Columbia University, New York and has worked as an Economist at the Central Bank and Ministry of Finance in Guyana. She is an integral part of the team that produces the Annual Commonwealth Secretariat publication Small States Economic Review and Basic Statistics.

HANS-PETER J. WERNER is a Counsellor with the Development Division of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) in Geneva, Switzerland and is the current Secretary of the WTO's Committee on Trade and Development. He is also the Secretary for the CTD's dedicated work programme for assisting small economies with their integration into the multilateral trading system. Mr. Werner has broad experience with trade and development issues and regularly engages in technical assistance activities to help build trade capacity in developing countries. Prior to joining the WTO, Mr. Werner worked as an economist for a banking institute, as an international consultant specializing in public affairs work and as a journalist. Mr. Werner obtained a Masters degree in 1990 in Political Science from the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva and bachelor degrees in 1980 in History and English Literature from New College in Florida. Mr. Werner is a citizen of Canada and Germany.