Goats and Malta Fever

TO THE EDITOR OF «NATURE.»

SIR,—I notice in your issue of June 16 a leader on the above subject which urges the desirability of Members of Parliament becoming familiar with scientific facts concerned in the questions they ask. May I say, as one who has studied this question somewhat closely, that Mr. Chancellor was perfectly familiar with his subject, and that the carefully planned reply he received through the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies fully bore out the truth of the inferences contained in his interrogatory?

Allow me to present the following facts:—

1. The goats whose milk is alleged to contain the micrococcus melitensis are perfectly healthy; to say, therefore, that they "suffer from the disease" is absurd.

2. It was owing to the presence of this micro-organism in the milk that the goats sent to America were slaughtered; there is no evidence whatever that the goats were "infected" or that they had anything the matter with them.

3. There was no epidemic of Malta fever "on board the vessel which carried them." Only five persons out of ninety were even suspected of the fever, on the evidence of a very fallacious bacteriological test applied after their recovery. The clinical evidence obtainable is against the assumption of Malta fever. Sir David Bruce has given a wildly exaggerated and distorted account of this voyage, one of his serious inaccuracies being the description of two cargo boats (one going from Malta to Antwerp, and the other—on board which no sickness occurred—from Antwerp to New York) as one.

4. It is not correct to say that "the Mediterranean Fever Commission sent out in 1904-5-6 to investigate the disease proved up to the hilt that Malta fever is milk-borne." They confessed after two years of laboratory work that this assertion had not been proved in regard to man. They rely entirely upon the above fictitious story of the American cargo boat for their evidence.

5. The woman in the quarantine station who is said to have "become infected" contracted fever three months after the goats had been landed in America, during which time she had been drinking bacteriologically pure milk—the "infected" goats having been destroyed. Of the scores of others who drank the milk both in America and in Antwerp, as well as on board the S. Andrew, no case of illness can be traced. Sir David Bruce has actually tried to gain a point for his theory by asserting of the owner of the goats—who died of pneumonia, following influenza—that "he disbelieved in the goats' milk, and he died!"

6. There is not a shred of scientific or statistical evidence in support of the statement that "the Maltese have been exporting their Malta fever-carrier goats, and spreading the serious human disease far and near."

7. Malta fever declined in the Army as soon as the soldiers were removed from the shockingly insanitary St. Elmo barracks to palatial new quarters on the hillside. During the first six months of 1906, before the goat's milk was prohibited, the number of cases had dropped from 643 to 123—so that the final extinction of the fever was well in sight.

8. Sir David Bruce has stated that Malta fever is contracted "by drinking goat's milk and by that only." Many persons in Malta can testify that they have suffered from this fever, and have never drunk goat's milk in their lives.

9. Likewise thousands of the civil population in Malta can testify to having drunk goat's milk all their lives without contracting Malta fever. Eighteen months ago, when I was in Malta investigating this matter, my daughter and I drank of it freely, and I am prepared to spend my next holiday there and drink daily of the milk of any goat whose secretion has been certified by Dr. Zammit, the public analyst, to contain the so-called micrococcus melitensis.

10. It is misleading to state that "the incidence of the disease among the native population is as great as ever." The average attack rate has never been more than 4 per 1,000 of the population, and in the last few years consequent upon the improved sanitary condition of the Island, it has been reduced fifty per cent—i.e., to 2 per 1,000. The average attack rate in the Army for many years has been ten times greater, and that in the Navy four times greater; whilst "Simple Continued Fever"—the same disease under another name—has been enormously in excess in these two branches of His Majesty's service. Why? My answer is:—The insanitary barracks in the one case, and the pestilential harbour in the other. Malta fever has shown a gradual decline in the Navy from 45.1 per 1,000 in 1897 to 1.32 in 1907; that is, the fever declined in proportion to the cleansing of the sewage depository of centuries. The decline among the military was sudden, owing, as already stated, to the prompt removal of the troops from an insanitary area.

11. I have dealt with the whole of this subject in the course of lengthy articles published in The Contemporary Review of August and November, 1909.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant.

Gloucester, June 29.

WALTER R. HADWEN, M.D.

WHAT IS THE ORIGIN OF "MALTA FEVER" ?

BY

WALTER R. HADWEN, M.D., J.P.

Colonel Seely, in appointing his new Commission to investigate the origin of "Malta," or, as it should be rightly termed, "Mediterranean Fever," declines to consider any origin other than a bacteriological one; it must be due, according to him and his advisers, to the micrococcus melitensis conveyed in goats' milk, and the new Commissioners have simply to consider how the healthy goats themselves contracted the microbe. In other words, Where does the microbe come from?

The interesting and conclusive evidence furnished by Dr. P. P. Agius in the article published on "Malta"—evidence which coincides with that obtained by myself during my visit to our Mediterranean island fortress—shows conclusively that Mediterranean fever may be contracted in Malta without the goat, and emphasizes the absurdity and inaccuracy of the statement made by Colonel Sir David Bruce that "it had been proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that Malta Fever was caused in Malta by the drinking of goat's milk and by that alone."

I have recently received from another correspondent il Valletta—the chief city of Malta—a most interesting communication giving his own views upon the subject. As a native of Malta, and a gentleman of education and observation, he is in a position to form a judgment upon the subject which has stirred the islands of Malta to their depths, and is creating so much controversy and bitterness of feeling in this country.

My correspondent's letter deals with the question of the spread of Malta fever among the civil population, and does not touch the causes of infection among the military and naval populations, which are due, as I have abundantly proved, to quite different circumstances. He says that thirty years ago Malta was looked upon as a most salubrious resort, for convalescent and strangers came from all parts to the beautiful Mediterranean islands to enjoy their pure air, and fever was little heard of; when a person fell sick the fever lasted only about a month, whereas now it may last eighteen months."

SEWER GAS.

My correspondent continues: "About the year 1880 the new drainage system was introduced. Dr. Ghio was then the chief Government medical officer, and the system was extended over the cities of Valletta, Floriana, Cospicua, Senglea, and Vittoriosa. Open ventilators were everywhere to be seen, and a foul stench arose from them in all directions, due very largely to the fact that there was not enough water to flush the sewers. Then appeared for the first time a succession of epidemics which went by the name of Dr. Ghio's fever, which affected nearly all the population. Subsequently, the trees, which were fine and sound, began to get sick and to droop; the fruits, which were renowned all over the world (particularly the oranges) for their fine taste, instead of being very abundant become scarce, bad, and full of worms; then the lark, which used to rise high up in the early morning to sing her sweet melodies, left our shores."

The writer asks: "Why should not the goat become affected as men, trees, and all other beings are? But," he adds, "if the goat is affected, the cause is to be found in the bad drainage system. About eight years ago inlets were made at each house communication. These inlets consisted in a hole close to the door of each house communicating with the sewers which proved to be a real nuisance both to the inhabitants and the passers-by. Many of the inhabitants closed these inlets with mortar and stones without the sanitary authority taking any steps against them, although it is a violation of the law—a fact which goes to show that they know the system is wrong and they dare not interfere."

Referring to Colonel Sir David Bruce, he says:

"He concluded his investigation on the assertion of persons whose whole interest is to conceal the real cause of the trouble, as they will not admit the faults of their predecessors, nor their own, for having continued to drain the island upon such a bad system."

And yet Colonel Seely, the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, absolutely refuses to grant permission to the new Commission to investigate these important questions of sanitation! What with the Colonial Department, the Local Government Board, the Foreign Office, and the House Office all under the thumb of the germ-fad-dists, and the responsible Ministers of each Department placing themselves body and soul in their hands, one begins to lose hope in the much-talked-of progressiveness and independence of Liberalism.

DR. AGIUS CORROBORATES.

In the Risorgimento of September 1, the editor, Dr. P. P. Agius, contributes a striking article in which he further corroborates the above conclusions. In the course of it he says: "We take this opportunity to draw attention to another proof against such theory which might be added to the thousand and one mentioned by us, and which has been brought to our notice by the son of one of our most popular practitioners, who was the doctor of St. Ignatius' College for many years. Some years ago an epidemic of Mediterranean Fever broke out among the Jesuits of St. Ignatius College at St. Julian's. Fourteen were stricken down with fever. No goat's milk was used—only cow's, and the cows are fed on forage and never partake of goat's milk. Only two or three of the pupils or convittori were attacked by the fever, though they numbered over ninety and the Jesuits were only about twenty in number. In searching for the cause it was found out that the Jesuits used to go daily in the evening to say their 'Ufficio' on the roof of the college, which bristled with shafts and ventilators from the drains and which was inaccessible to students.

"Besides this, the Jesuits used to live in the old part of the huge building, while the students dwelt in the new premises, a fact which recalls to our mind a similar one on which the attention of impartial and unbiased scientists was riveted by Dr. Hadwen when he spoke about St. Elmo's old and insanitary quarters, known by the Maltese name (and a very descriptive one, too) of el hofra or St. Jermu ta isfel. . . . The goatists say the Army and Navy do not use goat's milk and do not get Malta Fever; but this means nothing, for Mediterranean Fever has almost disappeared as well during this lull from among the civil population. And never was goat's milk used on such a vast and general scale among the population as now; in fact, the great quantities of milk that used to be turned into cheese for exportation are now being used by the population as a beverage and sold much more cheaply and in greater quantities for the same price, since by an Irade of the Sultan such cheese is no more admitted into Turkish ports (whereto it used to be chiefly exported) owing to the baneful and sinister influence of the goatists' theory, which has done so much harm to the best interests of Malta and the Maltese and to the first and foremost industry."

We feel assured that our stalwart friend, Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P. and other Members of Parliament who have so ably contributed to this controversy will not allow this scandal of the Colonial Office to remain uncriticised. THE GENERAL PUBLIC OUGHT TO BESTIR THEMSELVES UPON A MATTER WHICH SPEEDS RUIN AMONG ONE OF OUR COLONIES AT THE BEHEST OF A RIDICULOUS MEDICAL FAD.
